A Message From Our Vice President

“ We are committed to making sure the internal reforms we need are made.

Michigan State University reached a $500 million settlement with survivors of the Nassar abuse case in May. This was an important step as it cleared the way for the university to issue bonds to pay the mediated settlement straight away.

While this does not eliminate the hurt felt by survivors, we hope that it—along with our work over the last seven months—will show an earnest effort to improve policies, procedures, programs, and operations.

A compilation of this ongoing work, Taking Action to Foster a Safer Campus, is updated periodically and can be accessed from MSU’s “Our Commitment” website.

The changes taking place at MSU are focused on three main areas:

- Protecting patients and improving patient care
- Preventing sexual misconduct and sexual assault
- Responding to sexual misconduct and sexual assault

While the university is moving forward, I want you to know that we aren’t simply moving on—there is still important work ahead for all of us at MSU.

On June 26, MSU Interim President John Engler established a new Office of Enterprise Risk Management, Ethics and Compliance, to be headed by a Chief Compliance Officer (CCO).

The CCO will oversee adherence to and effectiveness of codes of conduct and ethics. The CCO will have independent access and report on a regular basis directly to the Audit, Risk and Compliance Committee.

Additionally, new resources have been dedicated to support student mental health services and in September we will open a second Counseling and Psychiatric Services location in the MSU Union. In total, 10 new positions have been added to our Counseling and Psychiatric Services.

We have also funded 13 new Title IX and related positions for prevention services or investigative work.

Sexual assault awareness and prevention will be important topics this summer at orientation programs for our new students and their families, along with a sharpened focus on respect as a core value of MSU.

In fact, Michigan State’s incoming freshman class will be one of the largest and most diverse in the school’s history, with more than 8,400 new students expected to join us this fall. We want to ensure that their expectations for college are met on this campus, both in and out of the classroom.

As Spartans, we take pride in our daily work, achievements, and sense of purpose to make the world a better place for all. We hold ourselves accountable when we don’t live up to our expectations. We are committed to making sure the internal reforms we need are made.

Thank you for your partnership as we move forward. If you have suggestions for our community, I encourage you to share your comments at the website listed below.

Respectfully,

Robert Groves

Dear Readers,

We've done our best in this issue to update you on significant changes to MSU policies, new building projects, and stories of Spartans doing good for the benefit of others. But first, you'll find letters sent to us earlier this year when news of abuses by Larry Nassar went global.

LEADERS BLINDED BY PRIDE

I love MSU and all it has given my childhood, my college education, my parents, my adult life.

But MSU was guilty of at least pride and maybe one or two other of the seven (deadly sins). (It seems) some at MSU were focused on a thing they wanted—to hang out under the halo of Olympians, success, and fame. This is fully understandable.

Larry Nassar's criminal mind understood the blinding effects of Klieg lights all too well and sleazed through an unlocked door at MSU (and elsewhere).

I'm now asking MSU's leaders to find the strength to come to terms with this. I'm gutted.

Randy Rentschler, '83
ALAMEDA, CALIFORNIA

LOOK TO THE FUTURE

Investigations are limited to looking at what HAS happened. Wise leaders look at what MUST happen in the future. MSU must clean out all the cobwebs of carelessness and mediocrity. The (interim) president must meet with every department and college leader and make sure ...they perform at the highest levels to produce the highest-quality graduates, research, athletes—all with unwavering trust.

Yes, we need to find out what happened and hold people accountable. But we must overcome the stigma of what has happened by insuring that the future is secure and is backed by every person who can advance the success of our great university.

Growing up in Greater Lansing and having a grandfather who worked as an administrator at MSU, there was never much doubt where I would go to college. Armed with a Michigan Education Trust 529 prepaid tuition contract that my grandfather had the thoughtfulness and foresight to purchase on my behalf, I eagerly headed off to MSU. The education I received there has allowed me to work in a field that I find meaningful, makes me feel good and brings joy to my life.

NO LONGER A SPARTAN

It is a black day to be a Spartan.

After reviewing MSU's policies for resolving the crisis by putting the university's reputation and finances first instead of the victims, the results will be quite the opposite. I hereby disassociate myself from being an alumnus.

This is being handled shamefully, and I want no part of it. I am 72, and I doubt this will be resolved in my lifetime. Fortunately, I have two other degrees to reference. Please remove me from any membership/ mailing lists.

POINTING THE WAY
Blue tanks like the one above store liquid helium created at the FRIB. The element is crucial to cool the laboratory's equipment.

A Star Is Born

Massive MSU 'discovery machine' to enable unprecedented breakthroughs

Carl Sagan talked about it—but MSU is producing it. “Star stuff,” or subatomic particles called rare isotopes. Exploding stars spit rare isotopes out around the clock—but making them on Earth is no easy feat.

That's where MSU's Facility for Rare Isotope Beams (FRIB) will come in. FRIB will be the world's most-powerful rare isotope beams facility when it becomes fully operational in 2022.

It's been referred to as a "discovery machine."

Experts believe it will be capable of producing 1,000 new rare isotopes for the first time ever on Earth.

FRIB is expected to more than double the research opportunities in such fields as nuclear physics, nuclear medicine, and homeland security.

Advances are also expected in astrophysics, plant biology, clean-energy production, and advanced radio-frequency systems.

Here are a few of FRIB's recent milestones:

- Completed substantial civil construction
- Began installing accelerator components
- Produced liquid helium, vital to the facility's cooling operations, onsite.

The Office for Nuclear Physics in the U.S. Department of Energy's Office of Science, MSU, and the state of Michigan are funding the $730 million laboratory; $97 million of federal funding will arrive this year.

Thomas Glasmacher, FRIB's director, said the facility is a coup for MSU because it's the first of its kind awarded to a U.S. university.

U.S. News & World Report rankings place MSU as the No. 1 nuclear physics graduate program in the country.

MSU is known as a world-class institution training the next generation of accelerator scientists and engineers.

Presently, FRIB employs 550 faculty and staff, and 270 students.

The laboratory counts 1,400 potential scientists worldwide who are looking forward to opening new nuclear territory.

GRADS: IT'S A BULL MARKET

Employers will face tough competition for talent in the 2017-18 job market, thanks to a seven-year growth streak in the college labor market, according to MSU's Recruiting Trends, the largest annual survey of employers in the nation. This year's graduates will enter one of the longest sustained periods of job growth, which puts them at an advantage, said Phil Gardner, survey author and director of MSU's Collegiate Employment Research Institute. Hiring overall is expected to increase 19 percent, driven by a 15 percent increase for bachelor's degrees and 40 percent for associate's degrees. Recruiting Trends 2017-18 summarizes data from 3,370 employers from every major industrial sector from every state. Employers represented in the survey plan to hire 74,000 new graduates.

Search for New President Begins

BOT announces process, timeline, criteria, and public listening sessions

The university's Board of Trustees has launched its search for a new, permanent MSU president.

The board expects to announce their selection in June, 2019.

Last May, it hired Teresa A. Sullivan, an alumna and president of the University of Virginia, to advise it as its yearlong search gets underway.

Trustees Dianne Byrum and Melanie Foster are at the helm.

Now through October, individuals and groups of stakeholders will be invited to provide their input.

Follow the search as it progresses at the website listed below.

LIKE THE UNITED COLORS OF BENETTON

MSU expects this fall to welcome the largest and most diverse freshman class in its history—with more than 8,400 anticipated students.

African-American enrollment is up nearly 24 percent. MSU continues to have the largest population of African-American students in the Big Ten. Hispanic enrollment is up 25 percent, while Asian enrollment climbed 36 percent.

LIKE KIDS IN THE DAIRY STORE

JOIN OUR PATRONS

The College of Music is proceeding with efforts to raise additional funds needed for its overhaul. MSU is providing 50 percent of the cost and the college will proceed with additional fundraising efforts for the remaining $6.3 million in private gifts.

It's Music to Our Ears

College of Music to undergo $35 million facelift and expansion.

In June, the university announced an upcoming $35 million facelift and expansion to the 1939-era College of Music Building. Plans call for 8,500 square feet of interior renovations and 35,000 square feet of new construction.

The project will encompass new performance, rehearsal, and practice rooms; a lecture hall; studios and offices; a recording/multimedia room; and a café.

Guests will enjoy superior acoustics and climate control. Performers will find larger practice areas for ensembles, choirs, and seminars.

Musicians will benefit from better hearing protection. And there will be larger spaces for student/faculty studio collaborations.

Private fundraising is an integral part of the project. MSU alumnus James Billman Jr. ('69, Natural Science, Honors College) made a lead gift to begin the project.

Additional major support came from alumni Byron ('54, Natural Science) and Dolores ('54, Communication Arts & Sciences) Cook, the late Ruth Charles ('47, Music) and Selma Hollander ('62, '65, Arts and Letters).

Every year, 550 students pursue music degrees and another 2,000 students participate in ensembles, classes, rehearsals, and performances in the college.

A Test of Faith

Dr. Timothy Burandt finds 'love thy neighbor' tested during medical missions to Iraq, where treating victims of conflict meant helping ISIS militants too BY TOM KERTSHNER

Timothy Burandt, in his own words a simple “country doctor,” found the faith that led him to go to Iraq put to the test when after arriving in the major northern city of Mosul, he heard what ISIS had done to the people there.

“ISIS would go into a neighborhood of Mosul and they would extract the families, and they would go to a local market or an open area or a soccer field. They would put the men on one side and the women and the children on the other and—just to get their attention—ISIS would shoot a few of the mothers and a few of the kids, randomly, if you can imagine,” he recalled. “Then they’d point their guns at the fathers and say: ‘you will either come fight for us, or we will (kill) your family right now.’”

After arriving in Mosul in December 2016, Burandt, a surgeon who lives in Trenton, initially treated mostly women and children. But later he treated Iraqi forces—and ISIS fighters—who were injured in battle.

“And as you can imagine, that really breaks some of the ethical or moral boundaries that you set for yourself,” he said, “taking care of somebody who may have just been responsible for hurting somebody that you just got done taking care of.”

Nevertheless, Burandt finished a one-month stint at a 17-tent hospital that had been set up by Samaritan’s

Purse, a nondenominational evangelical Christian organization that provides relief throughout the world. And he returned in April 2017 for another month to treat more patients, as well as to help train local medical personnel. (In July 2017, Iraq’s military forces regained control of Mosul from ISIS.)

“There’s something about just getting down to taking care of patients and only focusing on patients, not who in 1978 earned a bachelor’s degree in natural science and in 1982 earned a doctor of osteopathy degree, both at MSU.

Burandt said his own faith, as well as that of others, gave him the courage to decide to make the trip and to perform medical care under dangerous conditions.

“My wife, she’s a prayer warrior and she had an absolute peace about me going, even though I was probhaving to deal with bureaucracies and electronic medical records and all of the business of medicine,” said Burandt, who also leads an annual medical excursion of his own to help the needy in Honduras. “So, when this opportunity came, even though it was a very dangerous opportunity, I just felt compelled. We’re told both to love our God and to love our neighbors. And maybe that’s a pretty extended definition of neighbor, but north Iraq is our neighbor, as well,” said Burandt, ably in one of the more dangerous places in the world,” he said. “So, when you have that kind of a family that supports you, my church, a lot of my friends praying for me, when you have that kind of hedge of protection, you’re just able to go and do what is almost the impossible.”

Building Homes, Building Dreams

As CEO of Michigan's Habitat for Humanity, Sandra Pearson supports work across the state to make families and communities stronger and more secure BY DANIEL P. SMITH

Sandra Pearson has a case of “Habitatitis”—and she’s not afraid to spread it.

For the last decade, the 1992 Broad College graduate has served as CEO of Habitat for Humanity of Michigan, supporting more than 60 Habitat affiliates and 50 ReStores across the state, and she rarely misses a chance to invite someone to visit a Habitat construction site.

“That’s where the magic happens,” Pearson said. “A Habitat for Humanity homesite unifies us and strips us of our differences, and that might be the greatest hope for the world.”

During a 16-year career with the Michigan State Housing Development Authority, Pearson developed a passion for helping families pursue the dream of home ownership, which she believes builds strength, stability, and security for families as well as neighborhoods. Through her work, Pearson interacted regularly with Habitat for Humanity and was drawn to the Atlanta-based nonprofit’s global mission.

“I was just mesmerized by this international network committed to action and with boots and hands on the ground making a real, tangible difference in people’s lives,” she said.

In 2008, Pearson shifted from Habitat partner to Habitat executive when she accepted a top post with Habitat of Michigan, one of the international organization’s most active chapters.

Since then, the second-generation Spartan—and mother of a current MSU student—has leaned heavily on her MSU business education, particularly studies in leadership, to increase the organization’s reach and impact.

Habitat is most often associated with volunteers building homes, and Habitat of Michigan builds for some 150 families each year.

But the organization’s hands touch so much more. Habitat of Michigan who received the 2016 Duvernay Award from the Building Michigan Communities Conference, the state’s top honor for affordable housing and community development.

Pearson spends her days crisscrossing the state responding to affiliates’ needs, lobbying legislators, corralling new partners, visiting retail operations, and working alongside volunteers to build or repair homes.

“We’re only limited by our own capacity, and that’s something we’re building every single day here in also functions as: a social service agency, providing financial education and coaching to about 500 families annually; a mortgage lender; a retailer with its nonprofit ReStores; and a home repair company, rehabilitating about 700 homes across the state each year, particularly for veterans and seniors.

“The affiliates are the ones doing the homebuilding, volunteer coordination, and operating the ReStores. My role is to support them in whatever way possible,” said Pearson, Michigan,” said Pearson, who met her husband, Rob, a 1993 communications alumnus, as an MSU undergrad.

Traveling the state, country, and world on behalf of Habitat for Humanity, Pearson has learned that most global residents—from Detroit and Grand Rapids to Haiti and Vietnam—share the same principal desire: to craft a better life for themselves and their families.

By providing a pathway to homeownership, Habitat is helping to accomplish just that.

HOME ENGINEER
Pearson helps people of limited means find their home sweet home.

“That’s what motivates me every day,” she said.

It’s intense, time-consuming work, she admitted, but the energy and emotion of each Habitat house dedication make it well worth it.

“These families never thought they’d qualify for a mortgage, let alone own a home, but here they are with keys in hand,” Pearson stated. “It’s such a privilege to play a part in the journey.”

For Pearson, those moments make carrying Habitatitis a good thing.

The Legacy of ‘Mad Dog’

Kaleb Thornhill is building a career giving to others and honoring his late father BY PAULA M. DAVENPORT

Kaleb Thornhill, a former Spartan linebacker, remembers the day his grief turned to gratitude.

It was February 2007. A rising senior, Thornhill was reeling from his 62-year-old father’s death just days before Christmas. His father was a tenacious, big-hearted Spartan linebacker who in the mid-1960s, under Coach Duffy Daugherty, helped shatter college football’s racial barrier.

Fans called him Charlie “Mad Dog” Thornhill, and he left some very big cleats to fill.

At the time, the younger Thornhill, then 22, was recovering at home from one of five surgeries he endured in college. He toyed with calling football quits. “Until Coach D. called me and said: ‘Hey, do you want to switch your number from 43 to 41 your senior year to honor your father?’”

I began to realize how blessed I was to have grown up with a father who deeply cared about people, went out of his way to help them, and inspired them by example, he said.

“His book was closed,” Thornhill added, “but I could continue to write new chapters.”

“It allowed me to keep going and build something beyond myself. I was living for a legacy of the Thornhill name, the Spartan Nation, and my kids,” said Thornhill, who’d followed his older brother Josh’s footsteps to become the family’s third Spartan linebacker.

Nine years on, Thornhill is crushing it. He’s director of player engagement for the Miami Dolphins, the youngest person ever to hold such a position. Throughout the year, he counsels the players—regardless of their ages and life stages.

Translation: He’s the go-to guy for leadership training, career development, financial and investment education, real estate insight, improving family and social interactions, and post-gridiron entrepreneurship.

A two-degree graduate of MSU—with a 2007 bachelor’s in social science and a 2009 master’s in education—Thornhill also earned a Ph.D., figuratively, in the power of positive thinking.

In 2015, he and fellow Spartan football alumnus Travis Key teamed up to offer life-changing opportunities for even younger players in the Lansing area. Key, also a two-degree graduate of MSU—bachelor’s in 2007 and master’s in 2012—played in the NFL before becoming a packaging engineer at the Kellogg Co.

Together they founded the non-profit Apex Academy, a structured extracurricular program for qualified but under-resourced Lansing high school football players eager to become leaders, college graduates, and active members of their communities.

Apex annually accepts 25 sophomores into its three-year program. They may hail from four Lansing high schools—Eastern, Everett, Sexton, and Waverly—as well as Three Rivers High School.

The academy includes a yearly weeklong training camp at MSU, group community service, customized ACT and college prep sessions, financial aid opportunities, and career connections.

“We have a great opportunity to give (teens) a great chance of going to college, to change their family dynamics, and to (eventually) have an income on which to raise and support their families,” Thornhill explained.

He’s not stopping there. He recently launched Athlete Transition U, an organization that provides professional athletes with the education, experiences, and networks for successful business careers after their playing days are over.

“I’m dedicated to serving others. It’s my way of continuing what my dad started.”

A ONE ON ONE WITH THE PRESIDENT

JOHN ENGLER OPENS UP
ABOUT THE MOST DIFFICULT TIME IN MSU'S HISTORY

Former governor and now interim president of Michigan State University, John Engler has come under fire for his forceful style since the moment in early February when he was hired to lead his alma mater in the wake of the Larry Nassar scandal.

But after the June Board of Trustees' (BOT) retreat, Engler showed a more conciliatory side. He issued a public apology for remarks he made in an email—leaked to the media—about a Nassar survivor.

In his statement, he wrote “my email created a major distraction from the important work we’re doing to make our campus safer.”

Last month, Engler sat down with staffer Russ White, an MSU broadcaster, to discuss some of the policies and programs he’s authorized during his first five months on the job.

Here are edited excerpts from that interview, followed by a summary of some of the most recent new policies, and what are expected to be transformative changes Engler and his team are rolling out.

Q. What do you feel are the most significant accomplishments in your time here?

A. Well, I think two things really stand out. We were able to come into a situation where a man who committed heinous crimes against many young women, young girls, had been sent off to prison. But we had over 300 lawsuits pending against the university, and we had a great deal of uncertainty about the university’s path going forward.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY DERRICK TURNER

IN THE SPOTLIGHT
Reporters flocked around Engler as he exited a public event. Media scrutiny of MSU has become the new normal.

People were worried. People were scared. People were in denial that bad things had happened here. People were terrified about what the future held for the campus and the school they loved. Our alumni were upset. Nobody could understand how this could have happened, how it could have gone undetected for so long, how one man could have hurt so many people. And we had investigations at the federal and the state level that were being conducted. Everywhere you looked, there was a problem to be dealt with.

In our first three months, we were able to get the litigation resolved through a very effective mediation process led on behalf of the university by our new general counsel, Robert Young, a former chief justice of the Michigan Supreme Court. That was important.

Second is the operating budget the board approved on June 22.

On Feb. 14, Interim President John Engler announced a new structure for the university's health colleges, clinical practice, and student wellness programs, including two leadership appointments. All are aimed at preventing another Larry Nassar.

“ This university, which faced the most difficult challenge in its history, has emerged and is going to be stronger, safer, and more competitive than ever before.

Q. Where will the money come from to satisfy the $500 million in settlements?

A. (Because the BOT approved our recommendation to issue bonds) we're really able to manage the settlement. We still have financial issues to work out with the insurance companies. We are fully insured and expect that will be a significant contribution, which ultimately will reduce that indebtedness. So I think fiscally the university's in a good position.

Q. What else is in the MSU budget?

A. I'm proud to say...we went to the BOT with a two-year budget...I felt it was important at a time of transition... (because) we're going to go into a presidential search this fall. We want to recruit an outstanding leader to come to campus. I wanted that leader to have the security that the budget for this year is done, and it's solid, but also that the budget for next year is done... and it's a really strong budget.

Multiyear (budgets allow) us to not only set tuition this year (but to freeze it in year two).. After that, we'll move to a block-tuition strategy.

That means in the 2020 school year ...somebody who wants to take 16 or 17 credits (will only pay for 15). They'll be able to actually reduce the cost of going to Michigan State. So that's pretty exciting.

In addition, beginning this fall there will be a freeze on all administrative salaries and the deans' salaries. There will also be a reduction from 2.5 percent to 1.5 percent in average faculty pay increases. And there will be a reduction of about one-and-a-half percent that will impact each of the colleges. Those are important, but necessary, moves we had to make.

However, we will not reduce staff salaries. And you will not see a widespread, university-wide layoff policy.

(All of this) puts the university in a stronger position to compete for students...while completing projects that are very important to our research and teaching missions.

Q. What do you want alumni to know that they may not be hearing?

A. I think they need to know that this university, which faced its most difficult challenge (ever) has emerged and is going to be stronger, safer, and more competitive than ever before.

We're builders here. We always have been. Let's get back to doing that...I think you'll see...greater respect for Michigan State as we conduct ourselves the way a leading global university should.

Q. You've been meeting with faculty, students, and alumni. What do you hear most often from them?

A. They're very proud of Michigan State University. They're proud to be here.

By the time this new school year starts, we'll be introducing four new college deans—they will join the major leaders of the university. And when I talked to them as candidates, they were excited about coming here.

They thought, as I do, that Michigan State's best days are ahead, and they want to be part of that success story. They recognize that for the first time in a long time we're getting new leadership.

They understand that MSU receives more than $700 million in research awards every year. We're one of the strong members of the American Association of Universities, a binational group of research institutions.

And they see things we're doing here literally are not being done anywhere else in America. MSU is second to none. 🦋

TAKING ACTION TO FOSTER A SAFER CAMPUS

Mentioning all the changes made since Engler's arrival would take another 12 pages. So we've summarized some of the most recent, sweeping additions below. They include:

Reorganizing leadership within the MSU Health Affairs programs

Realigning MSU's colleges of Human Medicine, Osteopathic Medicine, and Nursing

Instituting mandated requirements among doctors such as new medical protocols, increased record keeping, introducing detailed patient chaperone policies, and strengthening information kept on off-site volunteers

Creating a new Office of Enterprise Risk Management, Ethics and Compliance

Establishing two positions: Associate Vice President for Civil Rights and Title IX Education and Compliance; and Director of Title IX Prevention, Outreach and Education

Funding key campus safety programs that will encompass:

- Hiring 13 new Title IX and related positions for prevention services or investigations
- Creating 10 new positions in counseling and psychiatric services

- Employing four new MSU public safety officers
- Adding two employee assistance staff members
- Setting up two new positions in the Office of Enterprise Risk Management, Ethics and Compliance

Founding a new Michigan State University Policy Library

Starting a Relationship Violence and Sexual Misconduct Expert Advisory Workgroup

Preparing for the September opening of a second location in the MSU Student Union for counseling and psychiatric services with 8-10 counselors

Contracting with Kroll, a legal firm, to promptly investigate and clear a backlog of sexual assault and harassment claims previously reported to MSU's Title IX Office

Offering the My SSP phone app. It provides students 24-hour access to a counselor using instant messaging

Building a New Future

New MSU facilities grow opportunities in research, education, and the arts. The advancement is attributed in large part to the success of the university's Empower Extraordinary capital campaign. Combined with federal research funding, key state appropriations, and prudent financial management, MSU is in a constant state of building for the future.

Michigan State University is expanding its footprint on campus and beyond, bringing new opportunities through leading-edge research, the arts, business, and STEM education. New and renovated facilities will power discoveries, enhance musical performances, transform student learning, and engage the community.

For the first time in nearly 50 years, Michigan State University has received state funding to build a classroom building on campus. Through its capital outlay appropriation, the Michigan legislature voted to award MSU with $29.9 million in funding for construction costs for a new STEM Teaching and Learning Facility. The new building will be located at the corner of Shaw Lane and Red Cedar Road in place of the Shaw Lane Power Plant. The total estimated project cost is $72.5 million.

During the past 10 years, enrolled credit hours in science, technology, engineering, and math-related courses at MSU have increased by 38 percent. Construction of the new STEM facility will meet the growing needs of MSU's students and provide them with the skills that are in high demand by employers across Michigan.

"The new state-of-the-art STEM Teaching and Learning Facility will be one more reason why students should choose to study at MSU," said MSU Interim President John Engler. "This amazing new facility will not only leverage the research being conducted at MSU on STEM teaching and learning, but also will facilitate scientific interactions at the undergraduate student level and enhance the university's ability to successfully compete for and retain talented students in STEM disciplines."

BUILDING A COMPETITIVE EDGE

Last September, the university broke ground on a $60 million Business Pavilion that will help enhance student learning and give the Eli Broad College of Business a competitive edge among the nation's top business schools.

"The pavilion will demonstrate our position as a top-of-mind leader in business higher education and enhance the student experience," said Sanjay Gupta, dean of the Eli Broad College of Business. "Similar to our students, faculty, and staff, this space exemplifies excellence, pride, connectedness, and impact."

The ultra-modern, three-story Business Pavilion will feature flexible classrooms, the latest technology to accommodate the needs of entrepreneurial students, a glass-walled atrium featuring panoramic views of the Red Cedar River, and an expanded career center to serve students, recruiters, and corporate partners. The 100,000-square-foot facility, adjacent to the Business College complex and Eppley Center, is expected to be completed in 2019.

TRANSFORMING ARTS FACILITIES

An expansion and facilities renovation for the College of Music will include a 35,000-square-foot addition and 8,500 square feet of renovated space.

With 550 students working toward music degrees and more than 2,000 additional students participating in ensembles and classes, the college has outgrown current spaces for rehearsing, practicing, and learning, says College of Music Dean James Forger.

“This will facilitate the work of faculty and students in extraordinary ways,” Forger says. Once the expansion and renovations are completed, climate control and improved acoustics will enhance all performances, while larger, flexible practice areas will accommodate ensembles, choirs, and seminars. In addition, purpose-built spaces for student-faculty studio collaboration and improvements in hearing protection for musicians will be created.

The Broad Art Museum at MSU also increased its space and influence, thanks to a $1 million grant from the MSU Federal Credit Union.

The new Art Lab is located across Grand River Avenue

from the iconic museum. It houses a research center, classroom and study areas, and new exhibition spaces that aim to boost community involvement.

CREATING NEW SPACES IN WHICH TO LIVE AND CONNECT

The new 1855 Place is the latest addition to campus housing. It replaces several aging campus-housing facilities and creates a living environment that supports both single students and student families around the resources they need to achieve academic success.

Located on Harrison Road across from the Breslin Center, 1855 Place consists of approximately 300 one- and two-bedroom contemporary apartments across 10 buildings. Residents have convenient access to academic facilities as well as a Sparty’s Market, Starbucks, Spartan Spirit Shop, and other amenities. The 102,000-square-foot project also is home to some campus offices and centralizes event-ticketing sales.

FOSTERING SCIENTIFIC COLLABORATION

A new era of scientific exploration at MSU will advance with the Institute for Quantitative Health Science and Engineering.

BIO ENGINEERING BUILDING

Known as IQ, the institute, located in the Bio Engineering Facility, is a collaboration among the Colleges of Engineering, Human Medicine, and Natural Science. It aims to foster collaboration in the sciences on campus and beyond, creating extraordinary possibilities for transforming patient care with new biomedical discoveries. The interdisciplinary research center is devoted to basic and applied research at the interface of life sciences, engineering, information science, and other physical and mathematical sciences.

POWERING DISCOVERY

Another landmark space in the works is the Facility for Rare Isotope Beam (FRIB), a $730 million facility funded by the U.S. Department of Energy Office of Science, MSU, and the state of Michigan. Supporting the mission of the Office of Nuclear Physics in the Department of Energy, FRIB will enable scientists to make discoveries about the properties of rare isotopes in order to better understand the physics of nuclei, nuclear astrophysics, and fundamental interactions and applications for society, including in medicine, homeland security, and industry.

The facility also will provide research opportunities for scientists and students from around the globe. When it's operational in 2022, FRIB will be the world's most powerful rare isotope accelerator, underscoring MSU as a world leader in rare isotope science.

ADVANCING HEALTH RESEARCH

A new era for MSU medical research was marked in September with the dedication and ribbon-cutting ceremony for the $88.1 million Grand Rapids Research Center.

The six-story, 162,800-square-foot facility will house research teams whose areas of scientific study include Alzheimer's and Parkinson's diseases, cancer, women's health and infertility, as well as autism and pediatric cancers.

"This research center is built around collaboration, not only to promote the sharing of ideas and information among the scientists within, but with the researchers and physicians at Spectrum Health, Van Andel Institute, Mercy Health Saint Mary's, Grand Valley State University, Pine Rest and Mary Free Bed," says College of Human Medicine Dean Norman J. Beauchamp Jr. 📍

Our Way Forward

When I signed up for MSUAA's Global Day of Service project in late March,

I had no idea how symbolic it would be. By the time the April 21 volunteer event rolled around, I had been asked to take the reins of MSU's alumni office, following Scott Westerman's resignation.

I am honored, humbled, and eager to continue the work of MSUAA and Michigan State.

A quick introduction: I grew up in Okemos and my father taught geography at MSU for 25 years. I earned two degrees here. In addition, I'm a proud alumnus of the Spartan Marching Band.

In essence, I grew up at MSU. I've seen some of MSU's brightest days and now I've seen some of its darkest.

With your support and hard work, we'll help restore trust and respect for MSU. I am inspired everyday by the optimism and hopefulness I see in our students—and in your amazing power and strength.

Since taking on this role, I have had the honor of presenting former MSU president and first lady, Clifton and Dolores Wharton, a distinguished alumni medallion.

In addition, I met alumni in New York City. I also presided over the International Alumni Board meeting.

In May, I was privileged to address several hundred of our newest graduates.

On top of all this, I attended a two-day workshop for 100 of our incredible alumni volunteers, and helped to host two MSUAA signature events, Alumni University and Grandparents University.

In the days ahead, I look forward to meeting and working with all of you. We have a lot of work ahead of us. But I know together we will continue to be beacons of Spartan values and determination.

I promise to respect and lead you and our university forward as we strive to help heal our Spartan community. We'd like to share with you voices from others working towards this common goal.

All in a Spartan's Day's Work

MSUAA's one-day service program expands to year round

Spartans don't sit still. Here's proof. On April 21, a total of 1,587 MSU alumni and students dedicated 7,054 hours of service to volunteer causes worldwide. They were participants in the MSUAA Global Day of Service.

Their efforts included: collecting sunglasses for Tibetans, teaching computer skills to the elderly, building water filters for Rwandans, and greeting U.S. veterans deplaning from an Honor Flight in Washington, D.C.

On top of that, participants worked on planting gardens, cleaning beaches, pruning trees, and restoring an old building into a community center.

Those are just a few of the 114 projects staged in such far-flung places as Shanghai, Indiana, New York, North Carolina, and Southern California.

Most participants belonged to alumni clubs.

All told, the Spartaneers provided much-needed assistance that would have cost around $174,163.

Not bad for a day's work, right?

Join the movement.

You don't have to wait until next year to get in on the volunteer action.

We expanded the program so it's all year long.

His estate has been gifted to MSU to establish the Donald W. Maine Endowed Graduate Fellowship in Higher Education Administration. Main passed away Feb. 7, 2018.

Mike & Margaret Morrow: Mike earned a BS from the MSU College of Social Science in 1972 and is the owner of MGB Associates, LLC. He and his wife Margaret, who in 1972 earned a BA from the MSU College of Education, have donated countless volunteer hours and pledged over $300,000 to support a variety of campus initiatives.

Distinguished Alumni

Given to alumni who have differentiated themselves by obtaining the highest level of professional accomplishment.

Dr. Mona Hanna-Attisha: Hanna-Attisha, MD, MPH, FAAP, earned an M.D. from the MSU College of Human Medicine in 2002; she is known for helping to discover and treat children suffering from lead exposure caused by Flint's water crisis.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson: Johnson, a former Spartan basketball star and MSU honorary degree recipient, is president of basketball operations for the Los Angeles Lakers; in addition, he is chairman of Magic Johnson Enterprises and the Magic Johnson Foundation. He is a passionate advocate for HIV/AIDS awareness and educational programs.

Earleatha "Cookie" Johnson:

Earleatha received her BS from the MSU College of Communication Arts and Sciences in 1981. Better known as "Cookie," she is a New York Times best-selling author, entrepreneur, and serves as the secretary to the board of directors for the Magic Johnson Foundation.

Craig Menear: Menear, chairman, CEO and president of The Home Depot, earned a BA from MSU's Eli Broad College of Business in 1979; he serves on the board of the Atlanta Committee for Progress, which brings together top CEOs to provide leadership on issues of great impact on the city.

THE LARGEST LIBRARY COMIC COLLECTION IN THE WORLD

Comic art bibliographer Randall Scott recognized the importance of collecting comics in Special Collections over forty years ago. Thanks to his vision and dedication, the Comic Art Collection now contains over 300,000 comics, exemplifying a quantity and level of organization unrivaled by any other library in the world.

Along with American comics, the collection also includes over 50,000 international comics and is especially strong in the areas of European, Latin American, and Asian comics. A collection of this size and scope would not be possible without donations from our generous supporters over the years.

Everyone is welcome to visit Special Collections to research and enjoy the comics in the Reading Room.
